Four jungle-fighting Aussie divisions were in action during Huon Peninsula campaign, and destruction of Jap power in area was clinched when Americans outflanked enemy on coast.

WASHINGTON SNAPSHOTS

BY JAMES PRESTON

I've just come across a story here which seems to typify the essence of a free, democratic people and of a country determined to so remain.

It concerns Admiral Ernest King, tight-lipped, grim-visaged Chief of Staff of the Navy, and outwardly one of the chilliest personalities among the Nation's war chiefs.

A short while ago the Admiral was visiting his boyhood town, Lorain, O. He was being feted by the political, social and business leaders of that part of the state.

At the very height of the festivities he drew his host to one side and asked if he might borrow a car for a short time to attend to a personal errand.

His host, worried lest some harm befall his distinguished guest, sent a couple of huskies in another car to follow the Admiral. They trailed him to a humble section of the city, populated mostly by foreign-born laborers in the steel mills. To their surprise the Admiral stopped in front of the home of an old Polish couple, parked his car and entered the house.

The Admiral had known the old steel worker when he was a boy. The day before he left Washington, he noticed the name of the old friend's son on the list of Navy seamen killed in action.

So while the great and the near great waited impatiently in another part of the city, their guest of honor sat with the old Polish couple, gently telling them the details they hungered for so greatly, of how their boy had gallantly gone to his death.

Before leaving, the Admiral took a photograph of the youth from the mantle, wrote across the bottom of it: "This boy died a hero, in the service of his country," and signed it simply "Admiral E. King."

Everyone present felt well repaid for their efforts to come, for the supper turned out to be a well-balanced dinner! For instance, the chain stores, who take the money out of your town and carry it to the great money centers.

The independent merchant is the backbone to development in any town, as well as the independent manufacturer, one is largely dependent on the other for mutual growth and success.

For the above reasons the folks in Washington have found it impossible to regulate prices with the methods they use, which do not control prices but very little, if any. So folks begin to wonder if they really wish to make

Textile Ministerial Association Meets

Association To Cooperate In The Centennial Observance By The Churches Of The World

At the regular monthly meeting of the Textile Ministerial and Religious Workers Association it was unanimously voted to cooperate in the centennial observance by the churches of the world YMCA, Sunday, June 4, 1944. In view of the close relationships existing between churches and the YMCA's during the past one hundred years and in recognition of the founding of the Young Men's Christian Association in 1844, it is proposed that a special observance be held in our churches on this date, which has been designated as world YMCA Sunday. The local ministerial association feels that it is their privilege to cooperate with Cone Memorial Young Men's Christian association as well as the national and international aspect of the YMCA brotherhood, as well as in cooperation with Committees of the Federal Council of Churches and the National Council of YMCA's.

It is to be remembered, that the Young Men's Christian association was founded by Christian young men in a prayer meeting that they had called to consider how, and by what method they could improve the moral and spiritual welfare of young men in the great city of London, England, back in the days when vice of all the varieties was bidding for the patronage of young men.

Rev. Hout, traveling exangelist now conducting several meetings in the city was the guest speaker. He challenged the church to assert its influence as an agency for righteousness to win the youth for the cause of Christianity; to give them a place to stand that is solid; enlist them in the activities of the church and community.

Rev. James H. Smith, President officiated. Rev. Sam Riddle of the Revolution Baptist church and Rev. Phillip Hutchinson of the Webster Memorial Baptist church were officially welcomed into the association.

Bowling Alleys And Social Room Have Busy Month

Alleys To Stay Open This Year Until Easter If Enough Interest Is Shown In Communities

The Bowling alleys of the White Oak-Revolution branch, and the Proximity-Print Works branch of the Cone Memorial YMCA have had the best year of bowling activities in several years. Mr. W. C. Moore was the supervisor and promotor, and Mr. Clarence Michael the supervisor and promotor of bowling have commanded a great following with the young people as well as with older people in the membership. Activities have centered about games within the organization of the village and the Cone mills. Much stay at home fun and wholesome recreation has been found here in our own community among ourselves doing the simple things that we have always had, but with many still undiscovered.

The alleys usually close with March but this year they will stay open until Easter if the bowling membership wants the privilege as they have indicated this week that they do. Now is your opportunity to get in that good game for spring training and warm-up that you need preparatory for gardening and other general work about the home. Since work at home involves both the husband and wife it would be a good thing for both to come to the YMCA for a work-out in the bowling alleys to be sure that you are ready to do other work for the summer together.

The social room operated by Miss Katherine Moore at White Oak and Miss Betty Jean Hunter at Proximity have been a source of enjoyment for young people two evenings each week during the fall and winter. They have done an acceptable piece of social recreation and has proven again that table tennis, bowling shuffle board and other table and floor games can be made highly entertaining and thoroughly enjoyable. This part of the social program will close this week as per schedule.

Revolution To Have Class In War-Time Meal Planning Soon

During these busy days, at home and away from home, we are all concerned with making time count, and yet, at the same time preparing the food for our families which will keep them "well and fit" for the jobs in hand.

A series of classes in the study and preparation of "Foods for Health" have been planned.

1. Eating for Health
2. Low-cost Meals
3. How to Share our Meat
4. Fruits and vegetables for all
5. Busy-day Meals
6. Packing Lunches
7. Budgeting the Income for Foods
8. Home-Canning and Storage

Due to the rationing program, we shall not be able to conduct our classes indefinitely but will hold 6 or 8 sessions. If anyone wishes a discussion other than those suggested, a substitution may be made.

Mrs. Lowell T. Steele, welfare worker, will have charge of the classes, and she is anxious to make the work practical for all.

There will be no hour which will be convenient for everyone, but it seems that a morning hour will suit many housewives, so for this spring series we shall meet every week on Wednesday from 10:00 to 11:30 beginning April 5th. Everyone is cordially invited to attend!

Gymnasium Exhibition To Be Held In Local Gymnasiums April 13th and 14th At 7:30 P.M.

Last Sunday was an ideal day for walking, and many folks did walk, not because they were out of gas, but, because they like to walk. A certain gentleman in our community started out early Sunday morning to enjoy a health giving walk, and as he proceeded on his way he met a young lady who greeted him with a cheerful "good morning" and added further, "you are walking like a soldier, Mister . . ." to which the gentleman replied, "That is just what I am trying to do. You see, a soldier is trained to walk proudly, and with proper carriage of his body to lessen fatigue on long marches. Notice how he carries his head up, shoulders back, chest out, stomach in, toes pointed straight front, and arms freely swinging. Ever try it? The young lady said she hadn't but that she would. Said she would walk like she was a WAC and they both went on their way. The gentleman is a member of the YMCA Health-Recreation classes and realizes that in the United States physical fitness is a responsibility. He has learned the rules for keeping in good physical condition and is trying to put them into daily practice. Those rules include, regular exercise, proper sleep, good food, balanced relaxation, fresh air and sunshine, and medical care.

Ask yourself these questions: Am I refreshed in the morning with no trace of yesterday's fatigue: ready for the day's work? Can I do my job as well

Greensboro, North Carolina, Friday, March 31, 1944

Our Governor Is Aware Of Dangers

Governor Broughton, in an article in the last issue of "The U. C. C. Quarterly", made some very significant statements. This article gives adequate proof that our highest state executive is wide awake to many of our present-day dangers and is equally awake to our responsibilities if we are to preserve a democratic form of government in the United States.

In commenting on the matter of state's rights, the Governor had the following to say: "Republican governors and Democratic governors are vying with each other in their robust championship of the rights of states. This is new and wholesome. In this unprecedented circumstance lies the best assurance that our unique form of government will survive its greatest crisis and proceed unimpaired into a larger destiny."

We are glad to note the optimism of Governor Broughton. He, we are glad to note, is not like many others who are expressing optimism in respect to the preservation of freedom in this country but have no ideas as to how we can bring to a halt the dangerous trends away from democracy which has been enveloping the nation for more than a decade.

The Governor also remarked as follows: "It cannot be denied that centralized government in its bureaucratic manifestations has attained proportions that are alarming. The war has necessitated much of this; and unsound tinkerers in government have undoubtedly sought to use the emergency to exploit schemes that are abhorrent to our form of government—schemes that would wither in the normal light of true American principles. But we may take heart in the aroused consciousness of the states and of the people. We are not going to have in America either a dictatorship or a totalitarian form of government."

We agree with our state's chief executive in that there is some aroused consciousness of the states and of the people but not to a proper extent. We are fearful that the degree in which the people have been aroused is not great enough for any of us to be overly optimistic at this time. We do not believe that as yet enough people have seen the dangers which lurk behind the shadows of many of the trends, ever ready to spring forth and crush the possibilities of preserving our American principles for the future. Those people, regardless of their station in life, who are taking the time and the trouble to study some of the unsound movements which have become most manifest in this country are equally as aware of the dangerous possibilities of their continuation as are the governors of the various states. Would that there were more of them!

Long before our present Governor began his splendid service as chief executive of this State, we, through this column, tried to do our feeble bit in analyzing some of the trends even in their incipiences and tried to point out what they might lead to. We contend that it would have been much better if more people had given more attention to those trends in the early stages, for it is much easier to refuse to grant autocratic and bureaucratic powers than to take them away after they have been once granted or seized.

We are also in agreement with the Governor's thoughts that our old state's rights principles could not have been maintained without some modifications in order to meet changing conditions. We also agree that the states should very cautiously strive to so modify the statutes and their administration so as to meet changing conditions, but we feel that they at all times should be over-cautious in making changes so that we may be sure that in so doing we will not destroy in the end those things that we are striving to accomplish by the changes.

As a whole, in this state and in the nation, one of the greatest troubles is that too many of those who label themselves "liberals" are too radical and too many of those who call themselves "conservatives" are too reactionary. Those who are conservative to the extent of wanting to preserve freedom of opportunity, protect well-earned property and encourage individual thrift and are liberal to the extent of recognizing the need of carefully planned changes which afford greater democratic opportunities, both economically and culturally, are not demonstrative enough. Too frequently the situation is that we only hear the voices of the extremists.

We cannot say that we agree with all of our Governor's ideas and suggestions, but we do feel that he has his feet firmly on the ground and is doing some most constructive thinking.

the cost of living less, in spite of the fact that taking money out of circulation will represent depression after the war ends.

We have another phase of the question, that has every bearing on, also a most important effect on a Monetary System based on Commodity Values, that is the "Bold Bad Wolf" Inflation. If the wolf was used in the right direction, this country would be better off, instead of making him bite the poor or semi-poor, make him bite the few who own nearly all the money and property in the country, who did control legislation to the extent of arming Japan, also to a great extent Germany. With Japan they kept on doing this when the Ambassador to Japan and others in the know, told our Government that war with Japan was certain. Should not these men be made to pay for the war instead of those I have mentioned, who are taxed beyond the limit and have given their sons to be killed, because a certain class can still make more millions. You will say that this has nothing to do with monetary or commodity values. That is where you are wrong again, as I will try to explain, but the hardest proposition ever is to make those who know and don't want to know understand anything. The value of the dollar is what it can buy, big money does not want low prices or the low cost of living, because with high prices they can pile up money faster. The value of the dollar can be made anything in this way, fix prices with the producer, wholesaler and the retailer. Big money interest, as I say, want high prices, but at the same time they wish to keep wages down to the lowest possible level and most of the taxes to be paid by the wage earner and smaller business men. The coal and defense workers have the upper hand on high pay or no work basis, because they want all the money they can get, just as big money wants the same thing. Big money has all the protection they can get through legislation, the coal and defense worker has the need of production at this time. The rest of the folks have no protection from legislation or anything else only to a small extent, because they have to make application to Washington before pay is increased, which is really ever permitted, even taking into consideration the higher cost of living every day that passes to try to get all the money they can from the highly paid worker and the rest of the folks besides.

QUOTES OF THE WEEK

"I can't tell my reasons (for believing the war will end in two months). I have them, of course. That's all I care to say on the subject."—Henry Ford.

"There is no room here in America for a Gestapo."—Rep. Hoffman, of Michigan.

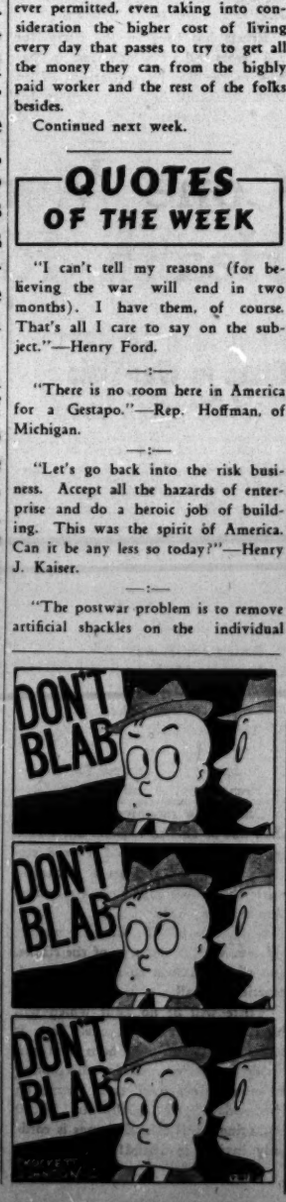
"Let's go back into the risk business. Accept all the hazards of enterprise and do a heroic job of building. This was the spirit of America. Can it be any less so today?"—Henry J. Kaiser.

—:—

"The postwar problem is to remove artificial shackles on the individual American's creative energy; to rule out regulation that acts as a straightjacket on ambition, invention, economic venture and technological pioneering; to restore normal human incentives of reward and accomplishment."—Pres. Eric A. Johnston, U. S. Chamber of Commerce.



Free Men And A Ghost Town

Fort Henry, N. Y., March 17—The government's $2,000,000 "model village" near Minesville is snowbound and silent ghost town today—because local workers, for whom the town was built, have rebelled against government regulation of their home life.

Thy prefer to live in their own modest homes. Here at least they can have their freedom, and their dogs, cats chickens, pigs, victory gardens, and "human guests at parties"—all of which are banned by "someone in Washington" from the Federal Defense Housing Administration's town.

Members of this traditionally individualistic community, employees of Lake Champlain's essential iron ore mines, are bewildered by the government's failure to understand the simplest needs of traditional country living. Practically every family had its dog, cat, and chickens, at least. Local wages were based on ability of workers to raise part of their food.

Surrounded by acres of land, the government houses, built to accommodate 1,500, are huddled like city tenements. There are no garages though distances to work, stores, movies are great.

Even more inexplicable was the rule against entertainment of friends except in the recreation center.

Yet with all these disadvantages, rentals were higher than those of privately owned homes. Today only 56 of 430 government-built dwelling units are occupied. The school built for 500 children has 35 pupils.

Reading & Writing

by Edwin Seaver & Robin McKown

Imagine, if you can, that you are an American soldier in the North African desert. For weeks your whole life has been made up of sandstorms and shellings. Then, suddenly, a jeep drives up and out of it pours—Carole Landis, Mitzi Mayfair, Martha Raye, and Kay Francis. As one of the boys, to whom this happened, put it, "I can't bear it."

These four Hollywood glamour girls were sent over to Europe by the U.S.O. about two years ago. They went to Bermuda, to England, and to Africa, where they put on shows for hundreds of thousands of soldiers. They waded down muddy roads when they could find no other means of transportation, and once they narrowly escaped death when a bomber in which they were riding caught on fire. A good deal of the time they were cold, hungry, and dirty. Sometimes they were sick. They travelled under Army regulations, and had no special favors. But they received a royal welcome wherever they went, and had enough adventures, hilarious as well as harrowing, to set them up for life.

Carole Landis tells all about the grand tour in the book, "Four Jills in a Jeep". There will soon be a movie with the same title, starring the four heroines in real life. But our hunch is that some of the outrageously funny incidents in the book will never be picturized, for reasons you will discover for yourself when you read "Four Jills in a Jeep."

"Good reading, good fun, and good Americanas," says Dorothy Canfield of Carole's book in her review in the current Book-of-the-Month Club News.

The man who found a nail in his broccoli, and wore it on his watch fob for years afterward; the centenairian who ate six boiled potatoes for breakfast every morning; the baroness who bought $90 worth of cavier a week, but sent her maid to Second avenue to buy oranges because she thought the hotel price of forty cents a glass too expensive—these are a few of the fantastic real life characters in Thomas Mario's "The Face In The Aspic," an account of th einside life in the confines of one of New York's most exclusive men's clubs.

The war finally caught up with this club. Shortly after Pearl Harbor, a young man dressed as an ordinary gob, walked in and threw his cap to the clerk. In peace time no one less than a commissioned officer would have dared venture in. But the sailor was a member in good standing, a Social Register family, and there was nothing the management could do. One can be sure the club will never be the same again.

White eyelet embroidery used as banding on the camisole top of a dark sheer short dinner dress is a fashion note from Hollywood, worn by Marie Wilson, featured in Warner Bros. "Shine on Harvest Moon". Broad straps on the dress are also of the cotton lingerie trim.

Vintage Vinegar

Ancient and honorable is the record of vinegar in history. The Egyptians, living along the fertile Nile that cradled out first civilization, regarded vinegar with mystic awe. To them fermentation was a godlike symbol—one of the mysteries of life itself.

The Hebrews knew two kinds of vinegar: The sour wine mentioned often in the Bible, and another made from honey and the juices of the palm. Hyppocrates, the golden-aged Greek who fathered modern medicine, prescribed vinegar for many illnesses. And when the bubonic plague ravaged Europe in the middle ages, vinegar was used widely as a cure.

Ancient alchemists, working with vinegar to learn the secrets of fermentation, formulated some of the first principles of modern chemistry. And at one time vinegar was even used for making extracts of some important drugs.

The kinds of vinegar that man has made have differed widely with the ages. Some was made from grapes, some from honey, others from grains and palms. Our own distinctly American type, known as cider vinegar was the product of our richly-laden apple orchards. Man used the makings that he had at hand, but make vinegar he always did. For the uses of vinegar were legion.

Most important, though least spectacular of all, is the use of vinegar to keep and cook our food. "Pickling" we call it in this country. And our traditions are replete with the full pork barrel stepped in pickle below the cellar stairs, jars of pickled fruits and vegetables, the pickled fish, the pickled venison and hare. We just naturally have a taste for vinegar on foods. For good vinegar not only helps preserve food, but it also tenderizes and adds a piquancy and rare bouquet as well.

Here are several recipes to prove the point:

Potatoes in Vinegar Sauce

Pare and dice—
1½ lbs. potatoes.
Cook in boiling salted water until done.
Melt in saucepan—
2 tablespoons butter.
Add, cooking until tender—
1½ tablespoons finely chopped onion.
Add—
1½ tablespoons flour.
Brown.
Add, stirring constantly, until thickened—
1½ tablespoons cider vinegar
1½ cups meat stock
1 bay leaf
Peel of ½ lemon, cut into strips
1⅜ teaspoons salt
Dash pepper
Pinch sugar.

Add potatoes to sauce, and let them simmer, uncovered, for 15 minutes. Remove bay leaf and lemon peel. Serves 6.

Health-Recreation Department News

as anyone else, and am I proud of it? Is my weight right? Excess fat is excess baggage to carry and feed. Am I alert and full of energy? Is my posture good? Is there spring in my step? Is my sleep sound, my appetite good and do I have plenty of pep to enjoy vigorous sports or other forms of recreation after the day's work? Then remember that athletes, to keep physically fit, follow training rules. The same rules will help you. Get fresh air in your lungs and the sun in your skin. Relax when tense, learn to conserve energy. Be eager to eat, but eat wisely. Get your sleep and live a life that makes you sleep soundly. Give your body a break; dress right, stand tall, walk proudly, keep bowels open, keep clean, keep in the "pink"; keep young. Conscientious training is the secret of fitness.

The Health-Recreation department of the YMCA will present a gym exhibition in the local gymnasiums Thursday and Friday, April 13th and 14th at 7:30 P.M. The people of the community, both adults and children, are cordially invited to attend. There will be no admission charge. A full evening of games, gymnastics and stunts will be offered.

The Thunderbolts of the boy's basketball league wrote finis to the basketball season for 1943-44 by defeating the Liberators 31 to 30, for runner-up honors at the White Oak gym, Tuesday night, March 28th. It was a close game throughout, with first one team in the lead and then the other. The Liberators were leading near the end of the game 29 to 30, and as the final seconds were ticking out, Fletcher Clay threw a shot wildly from mid-court and centered the basket as the whistle ended the game, and also put a dramatic finish to basketball for this season.

The members of the Thunderbolts are: Fletcher Clay, Herbert Hanner, Billy Sutton, Billy Riteer, Bobby Ward and Jack Campbell. Members of the Liberators are: Donald Maness, Bradley Faircloth, "Shade" Kincaid, "Kush" Land, Charles Winford and Buck Jones.

Trained Men Available For War Prisoner Entertainment

Versatility is nowhere more necessary than in the war prison camps. Practical men who have always disliked pedagogy have become excellent teachers of their own professions or trades. Since the millions of prisoners include every occupation and skill, there is excellent teacher and leader material to help effectuate the world-wide program of education, recreation, religion and vocational training which War Prisoners Aid of the YMCA a participating service of the National War Fund, stimulates and implements.

But the presence of trained men in any camp is determined by chance and not by its needs, and therefore YMCA secretaries have had to acquire new abilities in order to serve prisoners.

For example, in camps in Germany, theatricals are popular. Among the prisoners are professional actors, while plays and theatrical supplies are provided by the YMCA. Make-up materials—lipstick, rouge, mascara, creams—are important, and the person ordering these for the camps must know his subject intimately. Therefore, one secretary mastered "make-up" so thoroughly that, while the camps' "chorus girls" may not equal those of the Follies, the prisoners will back their expert on theatrical cosmetics against anyone on the stage or in Hollywood. This YMCA authority on "make-up" is a clergyman!
